

African optical cable price

Summary of Content

The average export price of optical fiber cables in Africa was $14,094 per ton in 2024, while the average import price stood at $8,418 per ton, with retail prices varying by type and length.

Market-Level Pricing

In 2024, Africa's optical fiber cable market showed a significant divergence between export and import prices. The average export price was $14,094 per ton, reflecting a 6.5% decrease from the previous year, while the average import price was $8,418 per ton, marking a 13% increase compared to 2023 . Export prices have generally increased at an average annual rate of 1.4% from 2012 to 2024, peaking at $16,047 per ton in 2022 . The market is concentrated, with Egypt, Morocco, and Tunisia accounting for 82% of total production, and Nigeria, Egypt, and South Africa being the largest importers by value . Prices are influenced by raw material costs, technological advancements, and regional production dynamics, as well as government infrastructure initiatives and broadband expansion projects .

Retail and Per-Meter Pricing

For smaller-scale or local purchases, per-meter prices vary depending on cable type and specifications. For example, a 125-micron G657 single-core fiber optic cable suitable for FTTH or FTTP applications is available at retail prices on South African platforms, typically ranging from $1.50 to $3 per meter, depending on quality, insulation, and vendor . Specialty cables, such as high-performance HDMI fiber optic cables or bend-insensitive types, may cost more per meter due to enhanced features .
